NEW EXECUTIVE MANAGEMENT ALIGNMENT FOR TEXAS CAPITAL BANK - HOUSTON

Bill Wilson joins as president;
Part of Bank's long-term growth strategy

HOUSTON (May 20, 2009) – In recognition of its dynamic growth to date and strategic growth plan moving forward, Texas Capital Bank has named a new senior member of the executive leadership of its Houston Region operations. William (Bill) Wilson joined the Bank on May 19 as president of the Houston Region.

“We have been very successful in Houston, so Bill joining the Bank gives us added strength and expertise to further increase growth in the region over the months and years ahead,” said Keith Cargill, president of Texas Capital Bank. “With the addition of Bill, we will have a very talented trio of senior executives to lead our Houston region and take advantage of the immense growth opportunities in the city.”

Cargill said that current Houston Region President Jon Clarkson is being elevated to the position of chairman, Houston Region. Clarkson and Joe Bailey started the Texas Capital Bank Houston Region banking operation in 2003. Long-time Houston banker Bailey takes on the new title of vice chairman.

“As Texas Capital Bank becomes larger and more diverse, it’s imperative to our continued success that we add strong leadership who will carry out our vision and give great performers the opportunity to grow with the Bank. We believe that Bill, Jon and Joe will be the premier banking leadership team in the city,” said Cargill.

Texas Capital Bank is a business bank serving the needs of middle-market companies and private clients in the state.

As president, Wilson will manage the Bank’s operations in the Houston area and focus on corporate and business banking. He comes to Texas Capital Bank from Wachovia, where he was the Central Texas region president. Under his leadership, Wachovia built a sizeable book of loan assets and deposits in the Austin and San Antonio markets, primarily focused on small and middle-market commercial relationships.

Executive Changes at Texas Capital Bank/2

Wilson has extensive previous experience as a Houston banker at Bank of America, where he was very successful in growing middle-market business and recruiting talented teams of bankers.

He said that he expects to have similar success at Texas Capital Bank. "This Bank has grown and is stable because it has concentrated on developing long-term relationships with customers and building a culture that attracts the best bankers who want to build long-term careers," Wilson said. "I'm excited about building on Texas Capital Bank's success to date, recruiting talented bankers and increasing our marketshare."

During Clarkson's tenure as president, Texas Capital Bank Houston has built a strong book of loan and deposit relationships. The Houston Bank has experienced average annual growth rates exceeding 30 percent in loans and 25 percent in deposits since its start in 2003. In his new role as chairman, Clarkson will focus on further developing the Bank's energy and commercial real estate areas, as well as private client services.

Bailey will continue to focus on business development and provide counsel to Wilson and Clarkson in his new role as vice chairman.

"Bill will be a great fit with our Houston operations and the overall Texas Capital Bank culture and business model," said Clarkson. "He brings a long and successful track record in developing commercial business to our Houston banking platform. His addition clearly signals the Bank's intent to continue an aggressive long-term growth strategy in the Houston market. He is an ideal Texas bank executive who will deliver value to Texas Capital Bank customers."
